Will Hanergy buy out its frozen shares for HK$55 billion?

Hanergy Thin Film Power Group Ltd. is stirring the market again with a proposal to buy out its frozen shares for HK$55 billion ($7 billion). It's not clear where the money for such a buyout would come from. Shares of the Chinese solar power equipment maker have been suspended in Hong Kong for more than three years.

Will Hanergy be able to build solar-powered vehicles and garments?

Hanergy's plans for solar-powered vehicles and solar-powered garments largely draw on different technology developed by the US-based developers in which it has invested. Earlier this year, Hanergy agreed to establish a joint lab with bike sharing start-up Mobike, to research the use of thin film solar on bicycles.

What happened to Hanergy shares?

Only a few weeks after Hanergy shares were suspended, in June 2015 the Chinese stock market took a hard tumble, triggering a months-long rescue that included a "national team" of large state-backed companies buying up shares.

Why was Hanergy suspended?

Hanergy's stock suspension was a "disaster" for the company, Mr Li said at the time, depriving it of a funding channel to service loans and funds raised through China's high-interest shadow financing sector. In its 2015 IPO prospectus, Hong Kong-listed Bank of Jinzhou revealed that it had $440m in exposure to Hanergy debt.

Will Hanergy stock resume trading in Hong Kong?

Mr Li has not been silent over the past two years, which he has spent battling Hong Kong regulators to allow Hanergy stock to resume trading while promoting grandiose plans to develop solar-powered automobiles. The Datong deal signed last week is the first investment commitment by Hanergy since its suspension.

Why did Hanergy suspend its stock?

The city government will hold the remaining 30 per cent, according to the local planning bureau. Hanergy's stock suspension was a "disaster" for the company, Mr Li said at the time, depriving it of a funding channel to service loans and funds raised through China's high-interest shadow financing sector.
